Celebrant - Tammy Bowdern

Nan had a twinkle in her eye,
A secret smile that could never hide,
Every Sunday, she'd take us along,
To places where we'd laugh and belong.

First stop was the bakery, so sweet,
Doughnuts lined up in a sugary treat.
Sprinkles, glaze, and powdered delight,
Her laughter as warm as the morning light.

With a box of joy, we'd make our way,
To the stores where we'd happily stray.
From shiny shoes to colorful socks,
She'd guide us through the aisles, around the clocks.

She'd laugh at our choices, shake her head,
Then buy us the things we'd dreamed in bed.
The joy was not just in the stuff,
But in her love that was always enough.

Oh, Nan, how you made each day bright,
With doughnuts and shopping, and your love so light.
In every moment, you made us feel grand,
With a gentle touch and a warm hand.

Now, though time has moved on,
Her memory lingers, forever drawn.
We still taste those doughnuts, sweet and true,
And shop for the joy that she once knew.
