For Keith

He was tough as they come, with a dry cheeky grin,

A fixer, a doer, with fire deep within.

From welding and Brisbane to business his own,

He built up a life through sweat, grit and tone.

Blue was his colour — like clear morning skies,

Music his comfort, his joy, and surprise.

Louie and Mancini, sweet James Taylor too,

Each song played a memory he quietly knew.

With tools in his hands and love in his chest,

He patched up the world and gave it his best.

A fair sort of father, both steady and wise,

He could weld a bed frame or dry tearful eyes.

But above all was Olive — his anchor, his pearl,

He never stopped calling her proudly “his girl.”

Now side by side in a peace gently curled,

Dancing through time in their own perfect world.
