The Power Of My Hands

Craig Montgomery

I was born in Sydney, Australia, the son of Barry and Pat, and grew up alongside my brother Brett, who still lives in NSW. From a young age, I learned the value of hard work and family, two things that shaped everything I've done in life. Becoming a gymnastics instructor gave me the chance to teach strength, discipline, and resilience, not just to students, but to myself.

My hands have held many things: balance beams, bruised shoulders, and nervous beginners. But nothing compares to the first time I held my son and daughter. In those moments, I understood what real strength was: love, protection, and presence. My children bring me the greatest joy, and being their father is my proudest role.

Family is at the very core of who I am. The laughter, the memories, the quiet support—it's what I hold closest. Whether it's catching up with Brett, remembering Mum and Dad, or simply sitting around the table with my kids, I'm most at peace when surrounded by the people I love.

I've always enjoyed the energy of rugby and the patience of cricket, but it's the love of my family that truly grounds me. The power of my hands doesn't come from what they've done, it comes from who they've held, and the life I've built with them, every step of the way.
