

Jeanette Bannister

2nd October 1942 - 8th July 2026

Reunited at Last

She stepped across the threshold, her earthly journey through,
To find the familiar faces that once her childhood knew.

Her mother stood there waiting, with arms held open wide,

Her father's voice called softly, to welcome her inside.

Her brother ran to greet her, his laughter clear and free,

Restored to youth and side by side, just as they used to be.

The girl they loved has come back home,

the golden years now passed,

Safe in the arms that held her first, she is a child at last.

But greater joys were waiting just past the golden door,

For there stood her dear husband, the one she'd hungered for.

No longer separated by the years they spent apart,

He held her in his warm embrace and healed her aching heart.

Then through the light, a laughter rang, a sweet and joyous sound,

As her beloved daughter ran, and final peace was found.

And gathering round to hold her hand, a lifetime's cherished blend,

Was the familiar, joyful circle of each departed friend.

The broken chain is mended now, the final tears are dried,

Safe with her parents, brother, spouse, her daughter, and her friends side by side.
